Obituary.

Providence, June 28.

Albert Waterman, President of the Fireman's Insurance Company, died suddenly in bed last night.

Equal Rights Illustrated.

The Woman's Suffrage Association of New York held a meeting Thursday afternoon. Mrs. Stanton being detained at home by domestic affairs, Mrs. Phelps presided. Mrs. Wilbour read a plan for the organization of different Conventions. Miss Anthony checked the proposition by proposing to lay aside the plan for the present and listen to some remarks from Miss Phebe Cozzens, who had just returned from an extended Eastern crusade. Miss Cozzens came forward and recited a lecture or essay, which had been previously delivered in Providence, Westerly, and other Down East villages. The advocates of the Fifteenth Amendment, she said, plainly confessed its weakness by their refusal to have [illegible] discussed. The President of the [illegible] Convention was handled by the speaker without gloves. The black woman, she said, [illegible] the black man's superior morally and [illegible] actually, and attempted by arguments [illegible] together logical to prove that all women are superior in these slight respects to all men.

Miss Anthony thought, though she had many times heard this [illegible] argument discussed, she had never before [illegible] so forcibly, terribly put as by [illegible] Cozzens. Mrs. Phelps had asked her, [illegible] Miss Cozzens' speech, why "they did [illegible] for her part, she felt more like [illegible] for the degradation into which [illegible] men were forced by this false position [illegible] by men.

Miss Blake, a young [illegible] from California [illegible] Japonica [illegible] to know if it would not be possible [illegible] women to hold conventions composed [illegible] of women. She thought they could [illegible] a great influence.

Miss Cozzens thought it impossible to get along without the [illegible]. In Missouri they were the best workers, [illegible] had to push their wives forward.

Miss Anthony—It is [illegible] impossible for women to hold conventions [illegible] of themselves without the consent of [illegible] masters, the men, as in the old day [illegible] impossible for the slaves to hold conventions without the consent of their masters. There is scarcely a woman in this city [illegible] could go to the Saratoga Convention [illegible] the money and consent of her master [illegible] her husband.

Mrs. Blake, Mrs. [illegible] M. Willis, and several other married women—I could, I could, I could.

Miss Anthony—It [illegible] because you have kind masters [illegible] When I ask any women for [illegible] or $1,000, she pleads that the husband [illegible] not consent to her giving it, and thus [illegible] cause to believe that they cannot [illegible] of money. As for the women here [illegible] go without their husband's consent [illegible] have broken loose, that is all. [illegible] way places.

Mrs. Blake—We [illegible].

Miss Cozzens—A [illegible] in this city told me that she knew of [illegible] a dozen ladies who were at heart in [illegible] of this measure, and would like to come [illegible] in favor of it, but dared not because [illegible] husbands would not allow them.

Mrs. Blake—The [illegible] have no idea of the amount of social [illegible] existing among [illegible]

JOHN H. LYNDE, — PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, JUNE 29, 1869.

State Election, Monday, Sept. 13.

FOR GOVERNOR,

Our readers will not be surprised to learn that Democratic prophets have added more failures to their extensive list. They have been predicting great dissensions in the Republican party in Ohio and Pennsylvania, from which they anticipated extensive conquests. But as usual the Republican party in those great States has faithfully adhered to its wise and patriotic counsellors, settled all differences harmoniously, and is resolved upon victory. The Pennsylvania convention unanimously nominated Gov. Geary, whose splendid record gives us assurance of success. In Ohio, we have Gov. Hayes renominated, and there can be but little doubt that we shall do better there than last year. Maine will lead off with a handsome majority for their encouragement. The Republican party everywhere sees the necessity of united action, to retain the State and National governments in honest and capable hands, and Democratic prophets will find their occupation gone for another season.

Democratic newspapers naturally take offence because Col. Forney says the improvement and intelligence of New England are so marked that in comparing it to many other portions of the country, it is impossible to ignore the influence of our radical Republican politics upon the people. Quite naturally to them, instead of trying to refute the truth of history, they content themselves with throwing mud at the man who records it. Democratic argument partakes largely of that element, since the wholesome authority of the government has abolished bowie knives and tar and feathers to a great extent.

THE NATIONAL FINANCES. A Washington dispatch says the money debt statement for July 1st will not be delayed in consequence of the close of the fiscal year, though its showing will not be so favorable for the government as will be the full returns for the year when recieved from all sources. The currency balance Saturday was about $28,000,000 and will be about $30,000,000 by July 1st. The gold certificates have increased largely and now represent about $50,000,000. The July gold interest will not appear charged off in the statement save so much as may have been paid in advance, but there will remain in the Treasury after the interest warrants have been drawn, from $60,000,000 to $65,000,000. The Treasury has redeemed nearly one million of 3 per cents during the present month. The internal revenue receipts will be very heavy for the remaining three days of this month, and the total for the year will reach $160,000,000.

New York this year will choose a Secretary of State, Comptroller, Treasurer, Attorney General, State Engineer, Canal Commissioner, State Prison Inspector, and two Judges of the Court of Appeals. The incumbents in these offices whose terms expire this year are divided between the two parties, the first four being democrats, and the other five republicans. In addition to these an entire Senate and Assembly are to be chosen by districts. The World believes that the contest this fall will be very lively both in the election of these officers and over the constitution framed by the convention of 1867 and 1868, which is to be submitted at the same time. The democratic programme as announced in the World is to renominate all the old State officers, being democrats, who will accept their present position, but one or two changes are anticipated from the transfer of gentlemen to other positions.

We find the following in the N. Y. Tribune, which we believe came from Maine authority: "Mr. Peters, the present Representative from the Fourth Congressional District of Maine, was so popular at the bar of his county as to nearly monopolize the legal business. Recently a gentleman remarked to a rising young Bangor lawyer 'I should think you Penobscot lawyers would miss Mr. Peters at the bar very much.' 'By Jove,' said the other, very emphatically, 'I hope we shall.'"

RUMORED RESIGNATION OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR. A telegram to the Journal says rumors of the resignation of Secretary Rawlins are again revived. He desires to retire on account of ill health. The President is, however, loth to dispense with his services, and it is, therefore, contemplated to grant him a leave of absence for six months and to appoint a Secretary ad interim.

A special from Washington says that the President and members of the Cabinet have been looking over the ground to find a site for the new Executive mansion, and are understood to be substantially agreed upon a location in the northwestern part of the city.

The Portland Press gives currency to a rumor "about town" that the delegates from that section contemplate nominating Gov. Chamberlain in their Convention today. Of course this is a wicked canard, and we trust no "tried" Democrat will be deceived by it. The Press simply mistakes the character of those of whom it speaks. Democracy can advance many steps yet in the proposed change of front ere it arrives within hailing distance of Gov. Chamberlain or any other Republican.

CHAIRMANSHIP OF THE REPUBLICAN STATE COMMITTEE. Owing to the anticipated absence of Mr. Blaine from the State during a large part of the summer, he has been excused by the Republican State Committee from acting as Chairman during the current campaign, and the duties will devolve on the member from Cumberland, Major Frederic Robie.

HOARDING CURRENCY. The New York Tribune says: "So much has been said of Mr. Boutwell's hoarding currency, cornering the money market, &c., &c., that we have had the curiosity to look back to last year's bi-monthly bulletins of the state of the finances, with the following results:

Currency in the Treasury	June 1, 1868,		$26,644,358
do	do	Aug 1, 1868,	32,174,196
do	do	June 1, 1869,	19,984,565
Less June 1, 1869, than June 1, 1868,			$6,659,383

It will be seen that the currency balance in the Treasury last year was largely increased between June 1 and August 1, 1868.

A newspaper calling itself Democratic thinks its party has been "chastened by years of defeat." There's probably room for more chastening, and the Republican party proposes to perform the operation.

The editor of the Cincinnati Enquirer ought to have a pretty large salary. He edits a Cincinnati Democratic organ and a second hand one on the Penobscot.

The Nomination and the Platform.

All the Republican papers in this State will heartily endorse the action of the Republican Convention of last week, and many of them have already spoken emphatically in its favor. The Portland Press, in a lengthy and earnest leader urges the soundness of the positions taken, and says that Gov. Chamberlain's nomination had become "simply a political necessity." The Portland Advertiser concludes a hopeful article upon the selection with these words:

"The nomination has been made and already the indications are that it will be accepted with the same unanimity which has prevailed for three years past, and ratified in September by a popular majority as large as could fairly be expected in a year like this, when no national issues are pending and the general interest in the election is at a minimum."

The Bath Times, which particularly represents the temperance men of its section, says:

"The Convention, however, representing the whole State, and taking all the circumstances into consideration, has pronounced for the Governor's re-election, and most willingly do we redeem our pledge to give him our earnest support not permitting ourselves to doubt that the action of the Convention will be triumphantly ratified by the people."

And again

"In re-nominating Gov. Chamberlain to the office which he has so successfully filled, a majority of the Republican party expressed, as they had a right to do, their preference for him personally, their approval of his past administration, their confidence in his integrity, and their appreciation of his gallant services on the field of battle.

"By the platform which it adopted the Convention proved the steadfast devotion of the party to its professed principles. On the question of national politics, the national administration, and of gratitude to the nation's defenders, there is not, nor ever has been, the slightest approach to discord in the Republican ranks. In the development of the material interests of the State, the Republican party has ever been earnest and forward, and the Convention did well to give assurance that it would still labor to promote that end. Economy in making appropriations and strict accountability in their disbursement, is guaranteed by the platform."

The Lewiston Journal, whose devotion to temperance is not questioned, under the head of "The Vantage Ground Gained," says:

* * * * "The largest Republican Convention ever held in Maine openly, squarely and decidedly announced to the world their hearty endorsement not only of the principle of prohibition, but also its vigorous enforcement—thereby making these principles a test of Republicanism in Maine.

"The event will show their wisdom, as well as the justice of this course. The Convention thought that the time had come when this great question of temperance and prohibition could not be winked out of sight. The spontaneous and significant expressions of sentiment in hundreds of Republican caucuses throughout the State, convinced every one that the question must be met, and duty, as well as expediency, did not allow the great body of the Convention to hesitate to respond to the wishes of the Republicans of the State, that Maine Republicans should lead off in renewing its adhesion to prohibition, and in pledging itself to seek its vigorous enforcement by all the means that experience might demonstrate necessary.

"We doubt not that all the friends of prohibition and its vigorous execution will show their appreciation of the stand taken by the Republicans of Maine, by heartily and actively supporting the organization that has placed itself on such a platform, and that their influence will be constantly exerted to bring the party squarely up to the position which it has so formally taken. The power of that influence has been sufficiently demonstrated under unfavorable circumstances, to render it certain, that, strengthened as it now is by the platform formally declaring their principles to be a test of Republicanism, it will hereafter make the powerful Republican organization in fact, as well as in theory, a thorough supporter of prohibition and its vigorous execution. Let us hope that no true friend of temperance will allow anything to lead him to abandon the very important vantage ground which has been gained, by separating himself from the Republican organization at a time when faithful work in the party can but compel its practice to square with its recorded and solemnly declared professions."

From abroad also the action of the Republican party of Maine is hailed with commendation by the Republican press as an earnest that we intend to lead the van in the circle of Republican victories next fall. Among the life-long temperance and prohibitory advocates, is the New York Tribune, and from that paper of Friday last we quote:

"General J. L. Chamberlain was yesterday nominated by the Republicans of Maine for re-election as Governor, receiving in the Convention 604 votes, to 376 for Sidney Perham, and 38 scattering. Mr. Perham was strongly urged by the extreme liquor prohibitionists; and it has been intimated that a few discontented Temperance men may nominate and run a candidate of their sort; but as the Republican Convention which renominated Governor Chamberlain indorsed prohibition, it is probable that practical Temperance voters will see the propriety of casting their ballots where they will most effectually tell in favor of the great object they have in view."

Political and Personal.

A close contest is expected in Pennsylvania. The recent decision of Judge Sharswood against the Registry law will give a chance to illegal voting once more in Philadelphia.

Jefferson Davis is in Paris in very feeble health and doubts are entertained of his ability over to return to this country. He intends, however, to revisit Canada this summer and to spend the winter in Mississippi.

It is stated that leading Virginia Republicans now in Washington think that Wells, the Republican candidate for Governor, will be elected by from fifteen to twenty thousand majority. It seems to be understood that the disfranchising clause will be stricken out of the Constitution. But few Republicans are supporting it.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Evening Post says the feeling among members of the Cabinet is more favorable to extending belligerent rights to the struggling Cubans than at any previous time, although there is still some disposition manifested to delay action for a few weeks. It is predicted that unless the Cubans meet with some disaster, their rights as belligerents will be recognized within the next thirty days.

In the Connecticut House of Representatives on Wednesday a bill repealing the usury laws was rejected by a vote of 118 to 77. The Courant remarks: "Well, some subsequent legislature will be wiser, and usury laws will go to the limbo of antiquated legislation, and twenty-five years hence the economist and historian, as he turns them over, will say—queer, that those fellows thought that was wisdom."

In the New Hampshire Legislature the temperance men are very active at the present time. Their leader is generally understood to be Col Henry D. Pierce, of Hillsborough, a brother of ex-President Pierce. They ask for a law providing for a State police, and say that if their request is not granted by the present legislature that they will withdraw from existing political parties and form a new temperance organization. They have already fixed upon the man they shall run for Governor if forced to that extremity.

Hon. George M. Robeson, the newly appointed Secretary of the Navy, is a son of Judge Wm. P. Robeson, of Warren Co., N. J., for a long time a leading Whig and prominently connected with the politics of the State. Upon the election of Mr. Frelinghuysen as Senator in 1867, Mr. Robeson was appointed by Gov. Ward Attorney General, which position he resigned for his duties. He is about 40 years of age, and holds a high rank in his profession. He is a strong and decided Republican, and has been earnest and active in support of the principles and candidates of his party.

The St. John (New Brunswick) Globe says, "They are threatening annexation in Ontario because of the Government concessions to Nova Scotia. In Nova Scotia they are crying for annexation because of the hardships imposed upon the people by the Dominion. The Dominion may be maintained a few years longer by honesty, economy, and general good management in its rulers; but none of these qualities appear to belong to the present Government, and the annexation sentiment is being rapidly manufactured in all parts of the country."

"Bright," writing in the Halifax Citizen, upon the present and prospective condition of this country, says:

"Heretofore, we have not only failed to attract immigrants to our shores, or to retain them when they came, but our own people are continually leaving us to go to the States. This unfortunate state of affairs is not only owing to the greater national prosperity of our neighbours, but it is mainly due to their Republican form of government, which to the down trodden millions of Europe, holds out the influence of an irresistible charm. Mankind are naturally Republican. The Divine Being established the Republican form of government among his own people, and only gave them a King in his wrath, in answer to their importunities; and among the countless millions in Europe, any amount of logic would be thrown away in attempting to prove by any means that kings and nobles can by any possibility be other than oppressors and tyrants. They quite agree in political sentiment with the American people in this respect. The latter cannot be influenced to reside permanently away from their own beloved institutions, by any amount of prosperity. The former leave home, country, and friends, to crowd the seaports, cultivate the vast prairies, conduct the manufactures, or fill the armies of the great Republic, which consequently grows in population and wealth, with a rapidity unexampled in history, the unhappy ones being only those who are unable to emigrate."

If they were independent, he reasons, with a Republican form of Government, the country could offer inducements to emigrants equal to those of the United States, and a career of prosperity would follow. He concludes:—

"At least, Mr. Editor, whatever others might think of our institutions, we would have the privilege of feeling that we were men—we should not have both the evils of poverty and the bitterness of degradation which every Nova Scotian now feels to be inseparable from the present political condition, not only of this Province, but of this Dominion."

RETRENCHMENT IN THE REVENUE SERVICE. Mr. Barron, the 5th Auditor, is making a rearrangement of affairs in his office, and will cut down expenses wherever possible to do so. The allowances to successors have lately been revised and readjusted by him so as to make it more equitable. In a few districts, mostly at the North, the allowances have been increased, but the aggregate reduction throughout the Union will be $40,700 a year. The payment of double salaries, as when a clerk acted in the place of a deputy, has been stopped, and some considerable reductions have also been effected in the matter of advertising.

Liverpool, June 28—According to the report 28,000 emigrants have left this port for America this season.

London, June 28—The great floating dock was towed down the channel today on her way to Bermuda. Everything worked satisfactorily, and it is thought she would go through safely.

Brest, June 28—Up to last evening steamship Great Eastern had made 697 knots from Brest and had paid out 776 knots of cable. There has been no fault whatever in the cable itself. Interruptions noted a few days ago it is now ascertained was owing to imperfections in the fend connections. Signals are still perfect. All are well on board.

Southampton, June 28—Steamship Dorian arrived yesterday with Minister Curtin as passenger.

London, June 28—The Times today has an article reviewing the policy of the U. S. government in dealing with the Indian tribes. It praises the patience and forbearance of the past, and believes that the course the government is now drawn to adopt it to be unavoidable.

No terms of peace, continues the Times, are practicable with unmitigated and for the most part irreclaimable savages. They must disappear, or the American nation will be checked in its growth and progress.

Paris, June 27.—The Emperor yesterday visited the city of Beauvais, and was received with enthusiasm by the people.

The Mayor and Bishop of Beauvais received the Emperor at the city gates and conducted him to the Hotel de Ville, where they presented an address of welcome to His Majesty.

In reply to the Mayor, the Emperor returned his thanks for the welcome he had received from the municipality, and the people of Beauvais.

He reminded the Mayor of his presence in that inauguration of the [illegible] of Jean Fouquet in Beauvais, [illegible] years ago. He was pleased to see the progress which the city and the department had made. It was the capital, he [illegible], he declared that this prosperity was mainly due to the order which for the past [illegible] years had reigned in France. He was certain that this condition of order would never be seriously disturbed. In response to the Bishop of Beauvais, the Emperor [illegible] of the Bishop couched in language of piety, were always received with deference. If his prayers were heard, religion would be honored by a happy people, and France would be great and prosperous.

Henri Rochford, editor of the Lanterne, has been convicted of the charge of [illegible] the Journal into France. He has been sentenced to three years imprisonment and a fine of 10,000 francs. To these penalties are added [illegible] of his rights of citizenship for [illegible] years, including the right to vote in any election, or to occupy a seat in the Corps Legislatif.

Mrs. Livermore, one of the prominent advocates of the female suffrage movement, has great hopes of New England, notwithstanding the rejection of the measure by the Legislature of Massachusetts. In a recent article published in her paper, the Chicago Agitator, she says:

"I was not prepared for the advanced condition of public sentiment in Massachusetts on the question of woman suffrage. The work in the New England States has progressed so rapidly and quietly that, living in the noisier, more bustling, and rushing West, I had taken no note of the change. I have really and absolutely not met with a single opponent or enemy of woman's enfranchisement during the two weeks I have been in New England. Of course, there are plenty of them, and of those who are more than enemies—people who are so indifferent to it that they will "neither quarrel nor kiss," but stand absolutely neutral. But it is a significant fact that, going into a new town every day, as I have thus far, to assist at woman suffrage meetings and Conventions, and speaking publicly in its advocacy night after night, the discussions being taken along into private houses and into the railway cars, while we have been travelling, I have yet heard no word of opposition. Some are doubtful of its accomplishing anything to the advantage of woman; some deprecate it mildly; but all appear to believe it "bound to come, even now at the doors," and refrain from active opposition."

WASHINGTON, June 27.

The President's views on the political situation in Tennessee will possibly be indicated in the appointment of a revenue supervisor for that State, in place of Major Noah who resigned on Friday. The Senter party out there is for the immediate enfranchisement of all disfranchised citizens, while the Stokes party is for gradual enfranchisement. Senator Brownlow sympathizes with Senter, and so do most of the democrats. Both of the parties are trying to get the influence of the administration, and the situation of things out there has been talked over in the cabinet. The fear of some persons is that the success of the Senter party at present will result in throwing a good part of the State into the hands of the democrats, and the election of Andrew Johnson to the Senate again. The new revenue Supervisor is to be selected, not by the Commissioner, but by the Secretary of the Treasury—probably after consultation with the President.

The public debt statement, for this month will not be delayed to close up the accounts of the year, but may be expected to appear on Thursday, the first day of next month, as usual. It will probably show a reduction of about six millions, but the yearly statement, which will be got out towards the end of next month, after the returns to Wednesday night have been received from all sources, will improve on that by at least two millions. Mr. Boutwell regards the financial season as quite satisfactory. He has about twenty-eight millions of currency and ninety millions of gold.

LOCAL AND MAINE ITEMS.

THE DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION meets this morning in Norombega Hall.—The number present will be small, only few having arrived last night and the heavy rain will probably keep away a large portion of those who had interest enough to [illegible] the [illegible]. There was very little excitement at the various hotels last evening, the Bangor House, which was the headquarters, owing to its being the place where the State Committee held their meeting, being as quiet as upon an ordinary evening. The fact is the Democracy are [illegible] having no principles of their own to put forward in the canvass, and seeing no good prospect of a [illegible] in the Republican ranks to give them aid and encouragement. The most that looked like excitement last night was caused by a proposition which was broached to nominate Governor Chamberlain upon a platform that would be also acceptable to the Democracy, and to [illegible] that would be a platform [illegible] [illegible]. The fate of this proposition [illegible] under discussion with July telegraphed abroad, and after the Convention gets together little will be done excepting to organize and air their eloquence until the Convention hears what is done at the Temperance Convention in Portland. If it is [illegible], the temperance men [illegible] support Gov. Chamberlain, we don't know what the Democracy will do except to [illegible] and go home. It is expected that there will be a [illegible] in the Convention by reason of a contest between the Old Veterans and the Young Progressives as to [illegible] fragment shall run the machine.—[illegible] F. Kimball, of Portland, is to be Chairman of the Convention.

MORE RAIN. Yesterday we were visited by a rain-storm of the old sort—a regular soaker. A cold, Southeast rain set in in the forenoon, continuing all day, and in the evening it came down in torrents, continuing to fall until midnight and giving promise of a rainy day to-day. What it detracts from the general interest in the Democratic Convention it will more than make up to the farmers by bringing to market the hay which is held back by the low state of the water [illegible]. Let it rain.

—The children are very much interested in their Floral Concert, and they are busily preparing their wreaths and garlands for the [illegible]. They are determined [illegible] prettier than ever, and we have no doubt of their success. The concert will take place on Thursday evening of this week. Let us hope for fair weather.

FOURTH OF JULY. Among the other announcements for the day we celebrate, our readers must not forget the Strawberry Festival at Norombega Hall, notice of which may be found in our special notice column. The Mendelssohn Quintette Club will also be present. Mrs. Weston and other vocalists will be engaged. The occasion promises to be one of great interest, and choirs and singers will make their arrangements to be present in full force. The public will not be behind in their accustomed liberality in sustaining the Association in their efforts to secure good music.

New Magazines.

PACKARD'S MONTHLY, the Young Men's Magazine, published by S. S. Packard, 937 Broadway, New York, comes to us for July filled with live and racy articles. Olive Logan discusses the Nude Woman Question. P. T. Barnum gives an account of the Courtship and Wedding of Tom Thumb and Lavinia Warren; and the other articles are of equal interest. The editorial department always discusses many topics. [illegible]

The subscription price is $2 a year. Its typographical beauty is not excelled.

THE PARAGUAYAN WAR.—The bloody warfare between the Paraguayans and the Allies has again commenced, and the triumph of the latter power against the former Paraguayans, as the following extract from a Rio Janeiro paper will show [illegible]

[illegible]

—It gives us the purest satisfaction to learn that a great number of British merchants who in various ways aided the Confederacy, by lending their money and by fitting out blockade runners, have come to insolvent grief and have been recorded in the Gazette. The great London house of Isaac Campbell & Co., which went largely into the blockade business, and in various ways comforted our rebels, has toppled over and has been entirely ruined by its benevolent good nature. If our States lately in rebellion should conclude to try rebellion once more, as soon as some of their ardent spirits desire, it is hardly probable that they would be able to raise much money or many ships in Europe. We all know what the feelings of a burnt child are toward the fire.—[Tribune.

The Angel of Patience

A FREE PARAPHRASE OF THE GERMAN.

To weary hearts, to mourning homes,
God's meekest angel gently comes;
No power has he to banish pain,
Or give us back our lost again;
And yet in tenderest love, our dear
And Heavenly Father sends him here.

There's quiet in that angel's glance,
There's rest in his still countenance!
He mocks no grief with idle cheer,
Nor wounds with words the mourner's ear;
But ills and woes he may not cure
He kindly trains us to endure.

Angel of patience! sent to calm
Our feverish brows with healing balm,
To lay the storms of hope and fear,
And reconcile life's smile and tear;
The throbs of wounded pride to still,
And make our own our Father's will.

Oh! thou who mournest on thy way,
With longings for the close of day,
He walks with thee, that angel kind,
And gently whispers, "Be resigned:
Bear up, bear on, the end shall tell
The dear Lord ordereth all things well!"

JOHN G. WHITTIER.

THE LUMP OF CLAY

My husband was a sculptor. He was by birth an Italian, but we lived during our married life in the city of New Orleans. He was not a poor artist; on the contrary he was wealthy, and spent his money lavishly, as men of genius often do. The daintiest viands, the rarest wines were always upon our table, and he would have no dress like a queen, had not my Puritan taste interposed and sobered down the gorgeous robes he would have had me wear; while our house was crowded with costly trifles, and our plate the finest in the city.

Often and often friends have spoken to us half in jest and half in earnest, of the tempting bait our dwelling offered to burglars or dishonest servants; but Ludivico laughed at their warnings, and I never knew fear when he was by.

So we had lived for five years, less careful by far of bolts and bars than many who had little save their four walls to protect, and never suffering save from some petty pilfered, when the autumn of 18— came. We had just returned from our summer trip inland, and Ludivico was busy with preparations for new work; fresh clay had been carried to his studio, models engaged, and everything prepared for a busy winter. I had my new duties and cares also, for a little infant not three months old lay upon my breast. And we were very proud and happy in our new treasure; never in our lives had we talked so much of the future. Every hour of that coming winter was portioned off. I remember the fact now with a sort of horror and an indescribable appreciation of the darkness which veils the future from our eyes, which I never felt before.

Yet why should we have feared to hope? We were young, we were healthy; we had enough and to spare of this world's goods; and we adored each other. The thought that all this might not last never entered my mind, nor, I believe, my husband's.

One night I had put my babe to sleep and went out into the kitchen to see the cook, to whom I had certain orders to give concerning breakfast, but could not find her.

Our servants were forbidden to remain out later than nine, and it was nearly eleven. I felt angry with the girl, the more so that she had left an outer door swinging and flapping in the wind; and with an exclamation of impatience I went to close it.

As I stood for a moment on the threshold, I could see the garden still full of beautiful flowers, and at its foot, leaning over the low fence, stood the girl, Jane, talking to a man.

The moon shone full upon them, and I saw the features of both plainly. Jane was a light mulatto, and it was impossible to tell whether the man was of her own color or a very swarthy white person. But, white or black, the expression of the face was hideous, malevolent, brutal, full of cunning; a face to be seen among felons' faces; such a face as Hogarth has drawn, and no man beside who ever handled brush.

I gazed one moment; then called out sharply and quickly, 'Jane, come in; it is too late to stay out,' and retreated.

In a moment Jane was with me, apologizing in her own servile way, and taking my rebuke very quietly.

I gave her my orders and sent her to bed, and then went up stairs and forgot all about the matter, though it was in my mind to speak of it when I was at the door.

For once in the room I found my husband had brought in upon a board a piece of wet clay and set it at the foot of the bed, and my first words were:

'Are you going to work to-night, Ludivico?'

'No,' said he, the clay is too wet; but to-morrow the first thing I am going to begin—can you guess what?'

'No,' said I.

'Our baby,' said my husband; 'we will make a sleeping cupid of him. It shall be my first work this winter.'

I laughed with glee.

'I shall prize it so,' I said. 'He is lovely, is he not?' and I kissed the child softly as he slept. An hour after I was sleeping also tranquilly, dreamlessly. The lamps were out, all was darkness and peace. How long it lasted I do not know.

I awakened with a start. I suppose some slight voice aroused me, for, after lying awake a few moments, I became conscious that some one was moving stealthily about the room—some one with bare feet.

I called out, 'Ludivico, is that you?' and then with terror heard his sleeping breath at my ear, and knew some stranger was in the room. Soon I heard a stumble and an oath, suppressed but plain; then the board on which the clay rested seemed to be pushed across the floor. My heart throbbed fearfully. I knew now that burglars were in the house, and I thought only of our personal safety. They might take all, if they did not harm my husband and my child. I watched and listened, holding my breath, until a ray of light shone in the room. I knew the thief had lighted a dark lantern. I heard the tinkle of the different articles he slipped into a bag. I heard drawers and wardrobes stealthily opened, and I prayed that his cupidity might be satisfied, and that he might go, leaving us unharmed.

Alas, the prayer was vain! Some noise louder than the rest awoke my husband. I strove in vain to restrain or silence him. He sprang from the bed, shouted, 'Who is there?' and made for the dark shape just visible. In an instant the lantern darkened, and a struggle in the dark commenced. I shrieked frantically. Steps and lights approached. A pistol was fired, a heavy fall followed. I heard the robber dash from the room and down the stairs, and the next moment the room was full of trembling servants, and I saw by the lights they carried, Ludivico lying upon the floor weltering in his blood.

I called his name. He made me no answer. I lifted up his face. Alas! the truth was written there—the bullet had entered his heart. He was dead!

What need to dwell on that sad time? Friends flocked to my aid, but I cared for nothing now that he was dead.

The house had been stripped of valuables and money. It was the boldest robbery accomplished for years—said the police. But despite all efforts—all offered rewards the culprit was not to be found. He had escaped us completely as though he had vanished from the earth.

When I had buried my darling in the strange city of sepulchres, where the dead of New Orleans repose, and waited many weeks in hopes that his murderer might be found, I took my child and went home to my kindred in old Connecticut. I was wealthy, and in no fear of want during my life. But the only possession I now valued was my child, the boy who might some day wear his father's mien, and speak to me in his father's voice.

I had dismissed Jane. She had been under suspicion, and examined carefully, but she appeared innocent. Of all the servants I kept but one to assist me in packing and travel North with me. While the packing was going on she came to me and said:

'There's a queer bit of clay on a board under your bed, ma'am. Shall I throw it away?'

I burst into tears.

'The last thing his hand ever touched!' I cried. 'Oh no, I will take it with me.' So the dry lump made part of my luggage; that and the dainty box-wood tools he had laid out to work with.

I found dear ones to grieve with me and nurse me at home, but my heart was broken. The only one object I had in view was to bring my husband's murderer to justice. But how, when experienced detectives had failed upon the spot, was I an inexperienced woman, so many miles away to succeed? They treated the idea with indulgent pity; but I felt sure that God would help me. The face at the garden gate was stamped upon my memory. It was the only clew I had, but it was something.

Soon I had another.

One day I began to unpack my effects and arrange them in my present home. Almost at the last of the work I came to that which was to have been our sleeping cherub, but which was now, like the hand which thought to mold it, a mere cold lump of clay.

I laid it on a table, and looked at it. I thought to weep, but amazement checked the tears. There, in the dry mound, was the impress of a foot—the lower part of a coarse, large, maimed man's foot.

The truth burst upon me at once. The robber had trodden in the clay. I remembered that the stairs and floors were spotted with it. I remembered the ejaculation and the thud of the clay against the bedstead. It was all plain. I locked the door and sat down with both hands on my head. A fierce joy overpowered me. I knew what to do. My hands had dabbled in cast making enough.

I found some plaster of Paris, and soon the foot up to the instep stood before me—a course, large foot, as I have said before, with two toes gone—the great toe and the next one—and an incision in the side, as though a piece had been cut away.

When I had done this, and though it was a matter of some time, I said no word to anybody. I broke down and was ill for a long while. The excitement had been very great, and brought on a brain fever from which I nearly died.

Yes, despite all this, nothing came of my discovery. I waited and hoped in vain. A year passed—five—the sixth began and crept on until the winter, and yet, though I had written to influential friends in New Orleans, nothing was made by my discovery.

At last I said: The secret is veiled from human eyes forever. I must give up hope. And I was calmer after that.

My boy was now a comfort to me, and I had gone to housekeeping with a young sister for a companion. She was a beautiful creature, and very much admired. My house grew gay, for I could not doom her to dulness, and young voices and laughter filled the parlor almost nightly.

Sometimes, however, I was alone there while she was away amid a gay scene and merry friends, and then I thought and thinking was a pain, and the hours seemed so long.

One cold winter night I had been alone when my sister Grace came home. She was in a merry mood, and cast her wrapper from her gleefully as she sat down by the fire.

'I've made a conquest my dear,' she said.

'Is that anything new?' asked I.

'What do you say to a millionaire?'

'I should ask, what is he like?'

'Oh, a Cuban only forty. I suppose, not a bit handsome; but he adores me already. It's no joke, and I always said I would marry a rich man.'

'Not without loving him?'

'Bah, It's enough if he loves me. How do love-matches end? Either one dies and the other is wretched, or they quarrel and are divorced in a year or two. Better no love at all.'

I sighed. She was half right after all.

'He's a mystery, too,' said Grace. 'No one knows anything about him, except that he's rich. He has bought the Elms—the finest place here, you know—and they are making a great pet of him—all for his money. He saw me home—to the envy of every girl in the room, and he'll probably call to-morrow to ask Mamie. You will shut me in my room and send him away, cruel sister.'

I tried to smile, and the thought came upon me that it might be better never to know the night of happiness than to be plunged from it into the depths of misery.

'I shall not turn the Cuban away if he is a good man and my sister likes him,' I said; and Grace laughed as I went to bed.

The Cuban did call the next day, but I was out and did not see him. The neighbors spoke well of him, however, and he had bought the great place called the 'Elms' and intended to be a resident of the town. In a worldly point of view it seemed a good match for any girl, and I waited anxiously to see the man himself. Three days after I had the opportunity.

Grace had been to church in the evening; my boy was ill and I had staid away. When it was time for service to be over I sat by the window watching for her. The bed-room was dark, and the moon outside very bright; consequently I could see the garden plainly. Soon Grace came up the path on a man's arm. At the gate he bade him good by, and stopped to say a few words. She stood inside, swinging the gate in her hand; the man with both arms folded on the fence outside.

I had seen the picture before. Where? With a leap my mind went back to the night before my husband's murder. I saw Jane the mulatto cook, and her companion; and, oh merciful heavens! the man's face was set off by ragged and unlikely garments, but the persons were the same. I could have laid my hand upon the Bible and sworn to that fact on the spot. As I grew positive of this my senses departed, and my sister, when she entered, found me in a swoon upon the floor.

When I recovered I doubted my own sanity. I laid what I had seen to the illusion of moonlight and distance. I argued with myself that night until I had made it seem this Cuban I must regard the whole affair a delusion. I waited my call sullenly but silently. Soon I met him face to face in my own parlor. The moment was a terrible one. I knew now I had made no mistake.

There had never been the faintest doubt in my mind that this companion of Jane's had been at the bottom of the murder of that horrible night. There was no doubt now that this was the man; yet my own common sense told me that to accuse a wealthy gentleman on such slight grounds, as the memory of a face seen once by moonlight would be absurd. I should be called insane. But, if I were, this was a bold bad man, and Grace should have nothing to do with him. I told her so that night and she turned on me angrily.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse. CHAS. MASON, Commissioner of Patents."

"I have no hesitation in assuring inventors that they cannot employ a man more competent and trustworthy, and more capable of putting their applications in a form to secure for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office. EDMUND BURKE, Late Commissioner of Patents."

"Mr. R. H. Eddy has made for me over THIRTY applications, in all but one of which patents have been granted, and that one is now pending. Such unmistakable proof of great talent and ability on his part leads me to recommend all inventors to apply to him to procure their patents, as they may be sure of having the most faithful attention bestowed on their cases, and at very reasonable charges. JOHN TAGGART."
